Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

David Stephens, PsyD

At the University of the Rockies, Dr. Stephens developed an academic concentration in correctional/forensic psychology, which prepares students to work in corrections and to conduct forensic evaluations. He was the primary developer of NCCHC's executive curriculum on mental health services in jails for the National Institute of Corrections.
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

Mental Health Services in Jails

- Best to think about a continuum and level of services
- Continuum and levels include consideration of facility size, budget, public health, risk management, recidivism reduction and inmate need
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

Mental Health Services in Jails

Level 1: Suicide Prevention (most important)

• Applies to jails of any and all sizes
• Incorporates public health, risk management and inmate need considerations

Level 2: Crisis Management (2nd most important)

- Not the same as suicide prevention
- Medications can be included here
- Incorporates public health, risk management, recidivism reduction and inmate need considerations

Level 3: Supportive Services (3rd most important)

• Includes responding to inmate and officer requests and referrals
• Not counseling or psychotherapy, but emotional, relational support
• Discharge planning can fall under this category
• Incorporates public health, risk management, recidivism reduction and inmate need

Mental Health Services in Jails

MUST have Levels 1-3 to meet constitutional AND accreditation standards

- Regardless of facility size, some component of all of these needs to be present in order to meet constitutionally mandated elements of mental health services

- Don’t have to be elaborate services, but must have them

- To not provide them means not meeting basic inmate needs and introduces risk in the event of litigation

Level 4: Treatment

• Includes diagnosis, a treatment plan and individual and/or group counseling or psychotherapy
• Counseling does not mean the “50-minute hour”
• Many options for providing counseling services
• Incorporates size and budget considerations (much more common for jails of 100+ ADP to provide actual counseling services as opposed to supportive services), public health, risk management, recidivism reduction and inmate need considerations

Level 5: Special Services

- Includes “residential” or “inpatient” treatment units
- Includes “co-occurring disorders” (mental illness, substance abuse, criminality)
  - Co-occurring disorders faced by a majority of inmates
  - “Special services” only in the sense that there is not yet any requirement to provide them, but appropriate services very explicitly address COD issues
- Includes trauma

• Includes addressing more complex or complicated issues faced by inmates, such as:
  – Dementia (alcohol-induced or other)
  – Concussions
  – Autism-spectrum disorders

• Incorporates size and budget considerations (much more common for jails of 250+ ADP to provide special services as opposed to supportive and even treatment services); public health, risk management, recidivism reduction and inmate need considerations
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: What is your perspective on the continual challenge to provide services with limited resources to a growing mental health population that seems to be increasingly acutely mentally ill?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

- QUESTION: How do jails handle the administration of involuntary psychotropic medications on a chronic basis?
  - What type of review committee/process is recommended?
  - How are hearings (including the incarcerated individual) structured?
  - How is the decision appealed?
QUESTION: For county jails especially, are there successful court or community programs to assist this very at-risk group in transitioning from incarceration to a care facility?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

Steven Helfand, PsyD, CCHP

Dr. Helfand has served in leadership roles for 20 years, including oversight of jail and juvenile mental health programs in New York City and the State of Connecticut, with responsibility for more than 300 staff members. He is a longtime instructor for the NCCHC seminar on Standards for Mental Health Services in Correctional Facilities.
QUESTION: How are facilities managing inmates who engage in self-harming behaviors such as swallowing foreign objects?

- How are these patients housed?
- Are they going on suicide precautions?
- What kind of suicide precautions have facilities used to be most effective?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: What are your recommendations or effective practices regarding discipline for violations of facility rules for inmates known to be mentally ill?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: What is your perspective on segregated housing, particularly on the effects on housing inmates with mental illness?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

Nneka Jones Tapia, PsyD

As executive director of the Cook County Department of Corrections, Dr. Jones Tapia oversees one of the largest jails in the country, Cook County Jail, with more than 8,000 inmates, of whom approximately one-fourth have an identified mental illness. She is the first clinical psychologist to be appointed to such a role.
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: With limited space and resources at Cook County, what changes have been made with a mental health professional as executive director?

• Have there been measurable successes we can learn from?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: How do you think providers remain motivated when they might feel the constant struggles of a revolving door of patients, noncompliance and perceived staffing shortages?
Contemporary Issues in Jail Mental Health

• QUESTION: Upon discharge, what system is in place to ensure that patients with mental health disorders have the proper services for follow-up, and what system is in place to make sure follow-up occurs?
